

MELTING OF GLACIERS

The melting of an ice floe contributes to a drop in the water level because ice occupies a larger volume than the liquid water produced after it melts.

The melting of sea ice has no negative impacts.

Every melted ice causes a rise in sea level."

Only the melting of land-based glaciers contributes to sea-level rise.

MELTING OF GLACIERS

The melting of an ice floe contributes to a drop in the water level because ice occupies a larger volume than the liquid water produced after it melts.

The melting of sea ice has no negative impacts.

Every melted ice causes a rise in sea level."

Only the melting of land-based glaciers contributes to sea-level rise.

